U.S. Military Budget Compromise Set

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Congressional leaders and the White House have reached a compromise on the military budget that would delay any vote on production of addi-tional MX missiles until next year and would set military spending for Union officials said the settle- 1985 at $292.9 billion, an increase of about 5 percent after inflation.

The compromise would require both the House and Senate to vote twice next April on whether to go ahead with MX production. Oppo-nents of the MX need to win only one of the votes in either branch to block further production, while the Reagan administration and MX supporters need to win all four votes if additional missiles are to be produced

According to Democrats, the compromise would allow for the production of 15 new missiles if supporters win next year's vote. Last year, Congress put up the money for production of 21 mis-

The embassy annex was on highalert before the bombing because of threats against it and plots that were discovered recently and blocked, according to U.S. intelligence sources.

But officials said that an outer gate to the embassy compound was opened for the van, and that steel gates and tank traps, due to be installed soon, still were lying by the roadside. They said the van initially may have been waved forward because of its Dutch diplomatic tags.

The U.S. Embassy annex northeast of Beirut was guarded by Christian militiamen who had been hired and trained after a contingent of 90 marines was withdrawn in July. Only 14 marines were left behind to police the inside of two embassy compounds, because officials determined that conditions for the safety of Americans had improved, a State Department offi-

Those marines were killed Oct. , when a driver of a truck carrying explosives crashed it into the headquarters of a marine peacekeeping unit. At the same time, 58 French troops were killed by another suicide bombing. A Pentagon fact-finding commission later criticized the marines for not having provided tighter security, particularly because a car-bomb had destroyed the old U.S. Embassy and killed 63 people there in April

But the State Department spokesman, John Hughes, said the embassy cannot erect the same kind of barriers that a military installation might use.

"One thing you have to remem-ber is that this is an embassy. It is not a military compound or a military barracks or a fort," he said. "An embassy has to operate as a public building. It has to be open to the public. It's the window of the United States on the world."

Others believe that Islamic Jihad is a distinct terrorist group with links to both Syria and Iran. There is, however, no irrefutable proof that this is so.

Earlier this year, a team of reporters for The Washington Post assembled circumstantial evidence linking the marine and embassy bombings in Beirut and the U.S. Embassy bombing in Kuwait to both Syria and Iran.

The 55-year-old actor-turned-politician made about $1.8-million profit on the deal, which two of his former movie agents negotiated with the studio. That one transaction, rather than his income from movies and television, is the basis of his net worth, estimated at close to $3 million. A detailed examination of Mr. Reagan's avail-

HEBRON, Israeli-Occupied West Bank - The Arab residents of the West Bank and the Jewish settlers who live among them rarely see things the same way, but now they are agree about one thing: Neither group has much use for the policies espoused by Israel's new coalition government.

In interviews here and in other West Bank towns, militant Jewish settlers expressed their dismay over the government's policy of restricting the establishment of new settlements.

Rabbi Eliezer Waldman, a founder of the settlement of Qiryat Arba overlooking Hebron, said he and his colleagues would be "on the government's neck" to press ahead with more settlements.

At the same time, Arab leaders made it clear that they had little hope that the carefully balanced coalition would have the political muscle to change the situation very much.

"This government is like a car with two drivers," said Elias M. Freij, the moderate Arab mayor of Bethlehem. "It can't go anywhere."

They struck a compromise under which work would be started on five or six of the less controversial of the 27 new settlements approved by the Likud

Decisions on any other settlements will have to be made by the 10-member "inner cabinet," which is evenly divided between Labor and Likud members. Labor members have stressed that this gives them a veto over more new settlements. But the Jewish settlers

"We'll make sure they stick to that pledge," he said. The rabbi said that if necessary, the settlers were prepared to establish unanthorized settlements without waiting for government action. He recalled that Qiryat Arba began that way but eventually gained approval as a permanent settlement from a Labor-led

CAIRO (AP) — French mine-hunters will extend their operations in the Gulf of Sucz for up to a week after finding more "mine-like objects," and Italian units were returning to the gulf on Friday for a renewed search after a Sandi merchant ship was damaged by an explosion. A French Embassy source said that two French mine-hunting ships and two support vessels searching the southern sector of the Gulf on Thursday found "a few mine-like objects that appear to be part of an object." mine field." He said the objects were found close to where the French located two Soviet-made mines dating from the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, one of which was detonated last Friday and one on Thursday.

An Italian Embassy spokesman, who requested anonymity, said the Italian contingent, including the mine-hunters Castagno, Frassino and Loto and the support vessel Cavezzale, would return to the Gulf on Friday from a search operation in the Suez Canal. He said Egyptian authorities requested this Wednesday following the discovery of a mine by British units there.

UN Cyprus Talks Are Bogged Down

UNITED NATIONS, New York (NYT) - Two weeks of talks involving Greek and Turkish Cypriot leaders here have ended without apparent progress, officials said. Further discussions have been sched. ed for Oct. 15.

The talks, which ended Thursday, were held separately with Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, the UN secretary-general. They were the first contacts in five years between the Greek Cypriot president, Spyros Kyprianos, and Rauf Denktash, leader of the Turkish population.

A UN official said neither side had gone much beyond outlining in position. He added that "they will have to do a lot better" if the October discussions are to be productive.

U.S., Soviet Astronauts Form Groun

PARIS (IHT) - A group of former U.S. and Soviet astronauts have agreed to form an organization to promote humanitarian uses of outer ace and space technology, a U.S. member of the group said Friday. Membership in the group, which plans annual private meetings, will be open to the approximately 100 people who have traveled in space regardless of nationality. The organization was formed at a meeting Sept 7-9 near Paris. It was attended by three Soviet space veterans and three retired U.S. astronauts.

The U.S. astronauts are Donn F. Eisele, Dr. Edgar D. Mitchell and Russell L. Schweickart. The cosmonauts are Alexei Leonov, Oleg Markarov and Yuri Romanenko.

Graham Lauds Open Soviet Churches MOSCOW (Reuters) — The Reverend Billy Graham, a U.S. evangelis,

said Friday at the end of a 12-day preaching tour of the Soviet Union that it was "wonderful" how many churches were open there.

Mr. Graham arrived in Moscow on Sept. 9 as guest of the Rus Orthodox Church. Once known for his fiery anti-communist remarks he said that some people in the West wrongly thought there was no religion in the Soviet Union and that he now believed there was a measure of religious freedom there.

Mr. Graham paid an official visit to Moscow in 1982 and caused controversy in the United States when he was quoted as praising the amount of religious freedom he found in the Soviet Union. On this tip, Mr. Graham said he discussed with Soviet officials the plight of Baptists who have refused to register with the government and face imprison or are in jail. He would not elaborate.

U.S. Army Paid Too Much for Guns

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The U.S. Army paid at least $84 million more than necessary in a $1.5-billion contract for 276 Sergeant York antiaircraft guns, Pentagon auditors have concluded.

A report from the Defense Department's inspector general was n leased Thursday by Representative Denny Smith, a Republican of Oregon. It said that too much emphasis was placed on accelerating the pace of the Sergeant York program and therefore "negotiations were not conducted in a way that ensured that the interests of the government were fully protected and fair and reasonable prices were obtained."

The Sergeant York, two radar-aimed cannons mounted on a tank chassis, is manufactured by Ford Aerospace and Communications Co. in Newport Beach, California. The army plans to acquire 618 of the guns by 1989 at an estimated price of $4.5 billion.

Fatah Delays PLO Council Session

TUNIS (Reuters) - Yasser Arafat's el-Fatah organization announced Friday that it was postponing a long-delayed session of the Palestin National Council, the Palestinians' parliament-in-exile, which was to iers next Friday

The central committee of Fatah, the dominant faction in the Palestian Liberation Organization, issued a statement after a two-day meeting but saying that it was still determined to hold the session. It said the postponement was needed to give time for further contacts with other Palestinian groups and give Algeria and South Yemen, which are trying to remite, the PLO, more time to normalize relations between Arafat loyalists and Syria.

Mr. Arafat's followers had been pressing for an early meeting of the council, on which they have a clear majority, confident that it would reconfirm his disputed leadership of the organization. PLO officials so that President Hafez al-Assad of Syria is adament that the council should not meet before Mr. Arafat is removed as chairman.

Texans Think Big About High Tech

Texas, whose name is synonymous with oil, is running out of it. Many geologists believe there is not enough undiscovered petroleum to last much beyond the year 2000.

And as the wells begin to dry up, Texas is undergoing a tran-sition, with scores of new ventures in computers, medical technology, aerospace and scientific research.

But can Texas make it big in the high-tech age? John A. Boatwright, an economist for Exxon U.S.A., with headquarters in Houston, says, "Texas is going to look more and more like the rest of the nation than it ever has in the past."

Why set up shop in Texas when Massachusetts or California might do just as well? The Texas Economic Development Commission cites the state's weather, its low unionism and low taxes. Mark Fowler, 34, president of a new Houston computer firm, says Texans may have more company loyalry than they do in, say, Silicon Valley. "In California, they can walk across the parking lot and get a new job," he said.

Inauguration Day, Football Won't Clash

The word going around Washington is that congressio nal leaders postponed the 1985 presidential inauguration one day to Monday, Jan. 21, to avert a television conflict with professional football's Super Bowl, which is scheduled for Sunday, Jan. 20. "It reads well and it tells well. but it just ain't true," said John Chambers, staff director of the Joint Congressional Committee on the Inauguration. He said that on each of the five previous occasions that Inauguration Day fell on a Sunday the president-elect was sworn in privately that day, with the public ceremony on Monday.

The previous five were James Monroe (1817), Zachary Taylor (1849), Rutherford B. Hayes (1877), Woodrow Wilson (1917) and Dwight D. Eisen-hower (1953). Mr. Chambers said there will be a private swearing-in of the next president on Sunday, Jan. 20, the date stipulated in the Constitution, and that the public ceremony will be the next day.

Homosexual Study Hints At a Biological Factor

By Jane E. Brody

New York Times Service NEW YORK --- A group of bomosexual men has been found to have a hormone-response pattern midway between that of heterosexual men and heterosexual women, according to a U.S. study. The pattern suggests, but does not prove, that a biological factor may play a role in the development of homosexuality in some men.

The study, conducted at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, Long Island, and published Thursday in the journal Science, examined hormonal re-

Hmong Flee Philadelphia's Violence

Harassed by Blacks, Immigrants Seek a Third U.S. Home

PHILADELPHIA --- Among his troubled people, the actions of Lu Vang were not unusual. But it was a sad day for him, the young man said this week, as he packed a van to take his family out of harm's way, far from the grim streets of Powelton Village in West Philadel-

It was the end of a chapter that began with high hopes when the Vang family, refugee Hmong from the mountains of Laos, were resettled here four years ago after a sojourn in Wisconsin. That visit has ended amid hatred after attacks by black youths against them and other Hmong people.

"Maybe they just don't like us, maybe something wrong with us," said Mr. Vang, 21, struggling to explain why he felt he had to leave Philadelphia's dwindling community of Hmong (pronounced mung) to go to Minneapolis.

"I'm not angry," Mr. Vang said. "But if we keep staying here I don't know if someone will die." Mr. Vang's extended family of 16, including his wife and two children, are among six Hmong family groups to leave Philadelphia in a recent eight-day period. They were fleeing a wave of violence that left them afraid, they said, to walk in the streets or even stay at home.

Mr. Vang was one of seven Hmong interviewed on Powelton Avenue, only one of whom, a Hmong leader named Bee Xiong, had escaped muggings or other violeace over the past two months here. Some were beaten and robbed, apartment windows were hit by rifle bullets and homes and Ruth Adams, a leader in the black community who has supported the Hmong, was threat-ened. She has helped organize a neighborhood meeting and a peti-tion drive on behalf of the Hmong and a march on a local police station seeking increased protection for the community.

The Hmong, who fought as allies of U.S. troops in the Vietnam War, have encountered problems, in-cluding hostility, wherever they have gone in the United States, but apparently the brutality here was the worst they have faced.

More than 55,000 Hmong have been resettled in the United States since the end of the Vietnam War in 1975. Few of them could read and write even in their own lan guage, and that has made it diffi-cult for them to learn to communicate in a new language. In the low-income communities where they live, they compete with the least skilled for low-paying jobs and public aid.

As many as 5,000 Hmong moved to Philadelphia by the end of the last decade, according to Mr. Xioug, the president of the local community organization. He said the local Hmong population has "Most," Mr. Xiong said, "had industrial world, but not for Africa. In the vast sweep of poor nations south of the Sahara, anemic levels of output and income continue to fall. A drought of historic severity, the worst of this century in parts of eastern Africa, explains only a part of the crisis.

A new analysis by the World Bank concludes that these desperate societies need dramatic internal reforms and sharp increases in aid. Without both, there looms the "specter of disaster." The bank's report will be presented to the annual meeting of its 147 member countries that starts on Monday. But American officials are grumbling that the member that can help the most is already doing enough.

Emphasizing that foreign help, no matter how great, cannot alone reverse the trend, the bank observes that development in most of the region is hobbled by unstable politics, frail economic institutions, unmanageable popula-tion growth and misdirected governmental action. The suffering has been compounded by forces over which the countries have no control - drought and depressed prices for commodities on which they depend for income. Washington has shown due concern for the drought. In March President Reagan asked Congress for $90 million for emergency food aid and got $150 million. Last month he redeliver it quickly to the poorest countries. But Congress has balked at the president's request for a five-year, $500-million "economic policy initiative" to reward reform of bureaucratic marketing systems that depress food production and increase dependence on imports. This worthy plan is blocked by Senator Robert Kasten, chairman of the subcommittee for foreign aid appropriations, who says the administration already has enough flexibility and does not need more money. This resistance leaves Washington applauding the World Bank's interest in reform but in no mood to hear its appeal for more money.

The bank estimates that Africa's 39 developing countries need $2 billion more each year than aid-giving countries and agencies now provide. That would be a 25-percent increase of which the United States would be expected to contribute at least $400 million. The bank would create a special fund to disburse the extra aid only in support of major reforms, but it has yet to present a detailed plan.

The administration and Congress should suspend skepticism and give the coming proposal closer study. Neglect of Africa's destitute millions will mean more suffering and the need for a still costlier rescue on another day.

Another Bomb in Beirut

Another bomb has exploded at an American facility in Beirut, claiming at least six lives, including two Americans, and adding an unnecessary reminder of the chaos and violence that pervade Lebanon still. Security precautions limited the damage somewhat, but, as Secretary of State George Shultz correctly ob-served, any American embassy must have a flow of people in and out, and that leaves some irreducible level of danger. We have great respect for those Americans in the diplomatic corps and other civilian agencies who serve abroad literally at their peril.

But what is to be done about this intolerable situation in which one American installation after another in Lebanon is targeted by terrorists whose patience and taste for martyrdom confer a deadly advantage? Are they Shiites? Iranians? Is there a Libyan or Syrian hand? In their invisibility and their menace, it scarcely matters as long as the assaults go on.

President Reagan defines the enemy as a worldwide terrorist movement," as if it were ubiquitous and so sinister that to think of avoiding its sting at any specific location were beside the point. There can be said to be such a "movement," but it is not the enemy in Lebanon. The enemy there is a condition of disintegration begun by the PLO and advanced by many others, which gives full play to the local killers. Perhaps it is time to remove the residual official American presence from their reach. We cannot "crawl into a hole someplace and stop performing," Mr. Reagan adds. That is an unfortunate formulation. The honorable mission that he set out to perform two years ago to help put Lebanon back on its feet after the Israeli invasion — has gone by the wayside. Perhaps he is reluctant to take a step that might be portrayed in the political campaign as an admission of failure in Lebanon or as a retreat from "standing tall." But the inability to find, let alone punish, those responsible for past attacks, and to prevent further attacks, exacts a toll on American prestige.

There need be no shame in the evacuation of noncombatants from a war zone, least of all from a place where, as in Beirut, the outer perimeter of the embassy annex that was bombed was guarded not by the army of the host country, which is not up to the task, but by mercenaries from one of the local private militias. American diplomats deserve better. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Unfree Trade in Steel

ports by forcing other countries to accept negotiated restraints is a masterly solution to his political problem. The reduction sought, from 25 to 20 percent of the American market, should be enough to silence union and industry criticism of the administration, undercutting Walter Mondale's appeal in the Rust Belt. Yet the choice of "voluntary" curbs on countries accused of unfair competition is likely to diffuse criticism of the steel industry by U.S. consumers who oppose formal import quotas.

And these import restraints will aggravate America's economic problem. They will cost consumers billions and reduce the competitiveness of U.S. manufacturers dependent on steel. They will do little to halt the decline of America's big, integrated steel makers.

Some sort of election-year restraints seemed to be inevitable once an independent government agency ruled in June that the domestic steel industry had been injured by imports. There was some spirited opposition from steel users; the Caterpillar tractor company, for one, threatened to move plants and jobs overseas if its steel prices were deliberately raised. But much of the opposition was diverted by competing interests. American banks, which understand how important it is to the industrializing countries to export steel in order to service their debts, were more immediately

President Reagan's plan to reduce steel im- concerned about the pending legislation to regulate their own business. America's auto manufacturers, the largest consumers of steel, and their union were in effect disarmed by their comparable desire to curb auto imports. That left the defense of open trade to intellectually sophisticated but politically weak bureancracies in the State Department and the office of the special trade representative.

Balancing its political interests against its free market principles, the White House strained to find a "middle" course. It says it will aim to cut "unfair" imports from South Korea, Spain and Brazil but will spread some of the burden to efficient Europe and Japan. But whether negotiated or imposed, its target for imports would raise steel prices by 6 to 7 percent, adding more than $3 billion a year to the prices paid by American consumers. Mr. Reagan might have done worse; he had the authority to reduce imports to 15 percent instead of 20, and to do it by quota, com-pounding the inefficiency by rigidly assigning sales to individual countries. But the decision is grim enough. President Carter organized an informal worldwide cartel in automobiles that survives to this day. Now Mr. Reagan has done the same for steel. Welcome to the world of "managed trade," in which consumers lose at once and everyone loses eventually.

Terrorism: No UN Remedy

The carnage wrought in East Beirut at the U.S. Embassy is yet another reminder of the growth of state-sponsored terrorism, and just how difficult, almost impossible, it is to combat. The United Nations is, of course, totally useless in dealing with the problem if only because its membership includes terrorist states. There has been much talk of securing more international cooperation among the major civilized powers and it was discussed at the London economic summit. But any formal agreement or convention drawn up would probably still be ineffective. - The Daily Telegraph (London).

United Nations: Self-Criticism Might Help

P ARIS — There have been about 150 wars in the world since the United Nations was founded in 1945 to keep the peace among na-tions. The forces of all tive nuclear powers have fought, but not against each other. Now, as the annual General Assembly gathers, complaints about its impotence are widespread.

Former Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim says in the current issue of Foreign Affairs that the United Nations "threatens to become increasingly irrelevant in the real world. Its vitality is being sapped." He scolds those in the Third World who logroll the adoption of extremist resolutions that can achieve nothing. "Not healthy," he says. He scolds the major powers because "the habit of international cooperation is waning" through their neglect or adamance.

The real problem, Mr. Waldheim notes, is the contradiction in the charter between the organization's first purpose, "to maintain international peace and security," and its first principle of "the sovereign equality of all its members." That means not only one nation, one vote, but also that the United Nations has no real authority.

It was a problem recognized by the founders when they discussed the veto power in the Security Council and tried unsuccessfully to establish a ty Council and their unsuccessions to establish a standing peacekeeping force. They saw that the United Nations would be able to resolve disputes effectively only if the big powers agreed. Otherwise nobody could knock heads together.

The Cold War and the generalized East-West conflict that soon developed ruled out much chance of major-power accord. But that was not the only cause of paralysis.

Fifty-one nations were represented at the San Francisco organizing conference. Now there are 158 members, of which 32 have fewer than a million citizens. No one foresaw the tremendous proliferation of independent states.

The charter was at least partly to blame. Its promise of "sovereign equality," its cachet of conferring national legitimacy as a member of the international community with a reserved seat in the hall and a flag on First Avenue, rewarded fragmentation of the world

As decolonization progressed, several federa-tions were established by departing imperial authorities in an attempt to make new countries viable. They all broke down. A UN place in the sun was prized beyond development capacity.

There have been attempts to repair some of the damage with regional organizations. But they are too feeble, no real substitute for political links. Only Western Europe, which spawned the nation state, realized the dangers of excessive nationalism. It created the European Community — but did not achieve larger aims of unification. The new countries plunged into the rage of national-ism as vehemently as Europe in the old days. Now it will be even harder to reverse direction than it was with 51 veteran states, mostly fresh

What Was Bothering Andreotti?

By Enrico Jacchia

ROME — The commotion over Giulio Andreotti's remarks on German reunification has almost settled down, but the underlying con-cern that prompted the Italian foreign minister's statements endures.

Mr. Andreotti meant what he said at a big Communist rally in Rome on Sept. 13. Later, during a state visit to Saudi Arabia, he confirmed his basic points to a score of Italian journalists: that it is inconceivable today to alter the European borders set at the end of World War II, and that there are two sovereign German states and Italy wants good relations with both.

These views were not improvised, and Mr. Andreotti has reiterated them since his return home. Almost all of Italy's political forces have dissociated themselves from his statement. Some members of Parliament have asked for his resignation. Nobody wants to spoil the excellent relations between Bonn and Rome. Emilio Colombo, when he was foreign minister, once proposed jointly with his West German colleague Hans-Dietrich Genscher the signature of a "European act" to achieve European union. Such has been the traditional way of Italian Christian Democratic diplomacy — floating proposals for the European unification in a useless excercise that implies no particular risk for the proposer. Mr. Andreotti is somewhat of an innovator. His initiatives, it is stressed in political circles here, have frequently caused surprise. He went to Damascus to see President Hafez al-Assad when the Syrians were pracin Lebanon. A few weeks ago he was welcomed as a friend in the tent of Libya's Colonel Moamer Qadhafi.

What prompted Mr. Andreotti's remarks about the Germanys?
It has been said, and written, that he was courting the Communists, by way of enhancing his chances to suc-ceed Sandro Pertini as president of Italy. As it happens, the Communist Party has disavowed his remarks, and they have been criticized by the party's newspaper, L'Unità.

Mr. Andreotti's most suspicions critics suggest that he aimed to blast cohesion among the European partners of the Atlantic alliance with a view to fuzzing the division between the two blocs and facilitating new initiatives for détente. To be sure, the issue he raised is explosive; and Mr. Andreotti is much in favor of détente.

But another explanation is making the rounds in Rome. Mr. Andreotti is known to have been worried by recent developments. On Aug. 17 came President Reagan's remark on Yalta, which was misinterpreted and raised undue expectations in some European circles. Then, amid excitement in West Germany before the planned (but since deferred) meeting between Chancellor Helmut Kohl and East Germany's Erich Honecker, diplomatic reports reached the Italian Foreign Ministry from Moscow stressing Soviet concern over the unpredictable process that the two Germanys might be setting in motion.

Mr. Andreotti is understood to feel that the danger of such a process getting out of a control is too great for discussion of it to be confined behind the closed doors of European ministers' meetings — where it has been under discussion, in fact. International Herald Tribune.

Now a Steel Cork for the Trade Bottle

WASHINGTON — Walter Mondale is a protectionist; he makes no bones about it as he solicits union support. Ronald Reagan is also a protectionist, but he is more subtle, ishing for support from free-traders as well as from declining and ineffi-cient industries and their workers. That is the main message of Mr. Reagan's brilliantly crafted political solution to "the steel problem" — a decision to "negotiate" steel quotas on a "voluntary" basis with countries that export to the United States. The limits are to last for five years.

With a hage lead now over Mr.
Mondale, Mr. Reagan had a chance to stand up for a principle. He didn't, which may mean that the White House politicians take that 18-point ad in the polls with a grain of salt.

But quotas are quotas, whether for-mal or voluntary. They will limit the amount of foreign steel that will enter the United States, raise prices and do nothing to encourage the longtime survival of the steel industry or steel jobs. The president's action adds one more to a growing list of protections he has provided in the last two years for the auto, textile, specialty-steel, motorcycle, meat, sugar, and other industries. All contradict his highly touted open-trade philosophy. In this case, Mr. Reagan ignored a recommendation by the Internation-al Trade Commission for formal quotas and tariffs. But he said he would aim to reduce foreign penetration of the steel market from the present 25 percent to less than 20 percent.

That works out to a 25-percent reduction in imports, or the elimination of one in every four tons of steel presently imported. That is big protection. Robert Crandall of Brookings estimates that imported steel prices will rise by about 20 percent and that the overall average price in the United States will go up by between 5 and 7 percent.

All the reasons Mr. Reagan cited for rejecting formal quotas on imported steel apply equally against the sappointing action he took. The White House deserves an award for shrowd public relations. It succeeded in getting headlines that say "Reagan Rejects Steel Quotas." The White House turned Trade Ambassador Bill Brock loose to Once again Senator Jesse Heims of Helms thinks ratifying treaties spout an anti-protectionist line. television hookup for Pittsburgh stations, Mr. Reagan was accurately saying. "We want to get the message out on how much we're doing" to protect the industry and the workers. The charade of calling the forthcoming quotas "voluntary" becomes clear from a White House statement that if the countries that are asked to limit their exports refuse to do so. Mr. Reagan will be "prepared to use his authority" under the Trade Act of 1974 to impose formal restrictions.

If you still have trouble deciding who came out on top, hear David M. Roderick, chairman of United States Steel, the number one producer: "Today's action puts us back in the game. We can now make steel a more attractive investment, and thus assist in attracting affordable capital for the modernization of our facilities." There is little to distinguish the Reagan protectionist scheme from Mr. Mondale's, which would cut steel import penetration to 17 percent. Mr. Crandall notes that Europe, about 15.5 percent of imports. Because European shipments would not be further reduced, Mr. Reagan "would have to put the squeeze on a lot of our other trading partners" — which include Japan, Canada, Brazil, South Korea, Mexico and Spain. Less-developed countries would be hard hit -- some of them at a time when they are trying desperately to meet foreign loan obligations. Whether Mr. Reagan can actually succeed "in getting everybody in the net," as Mr. Crandall puts it, is another question. That is the one significant difference between the Reagan plan and formal quotas: It could more easily disintegrate. The industry and the union would rather have something formal on the books.

The parallel with the "voluntary" quotas on Japanese cars is striking. And it is worth recalling that those auto quotas, installed for a period of three years, have been extended for a fourth and may be extended even longer. Like narcotics, the quota habit is hard to kick

Reagan Can Afford to Be Serious

By George F. Will

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reastepping so high that the mind reds off into paradoxes, including these two: Mr. Reagan is soaring because he has restored trust in that which he distrusts - government; and he is exactly in tune with the mood of the moment, which is liberal.

Fate has played Mr. Reagan the trick of causing him, the scourge of government, to rehabilitate it. The ugly truth must be faced: When folks feel good about their country, some of the feeling spills over and attaches to the institutions of community life the expression of collective effort the government. There are 80,000 governmental units in this Republic but one sets the tone - the one Mr. Reagan has. And contentment with the presidency is spreading and con-taminating all of public life. It was especially reckless of him to reduce inflation. In the last decade inflation became considered the principal domestic problem, and govern-ment was considered the principal cause of inflation. Inflation was the main reason why, just two years ago, three-quarters of those questioned in one reliable poll said that government causes more problems than it solves. The taming of inflation, for now, has removed the irritant in the public's eye regarding government.

The public's liberalism, and Mr. Reagan's benefit from it, is less apparent but even more important, and explains why the Reverend Jerry Falwell's favorite candidate is overwhelmingly the favorite candidate of voters aged 18 to 26. Eighty years ago Henry James de fined journalism as the science of beating the sense out of words. It certainly has done so to political labels. But it is no mere semantic quibble to insist that the essential aim of liberalism, and the central liberal valne, is the maximization of individual choice. And that is the feeling - the aura - produced by the president's achievement, rapid economic growth The illiberal aspects of the Reagan program - opposition to abortion, and perhaps support for school prayer — have received attention dispro-portionate to their importance to the electorate. The Supreme Court, not the executive branch, has custody of issues involving abortion and chi state relations. With five justices in their late 70s, a president can make a big difference on the court, but that is a contingency too remote to be controlling on the minds of many voters. The conservative temperament is at bottom, incorrigibly skeptical of the ability of human plans to eliminate the rattling bumps from the road of life. But Mr. Reagan is infectiously serene about the evaporation of deficits and all other limiting facts, pain-lessly, under the heat of economic growth. He seems to imagine that business cycles have been banished. Recently Mr. Reagan told an audi-"hedonism." It was an enchanting moment, involving a word not usual ly featured in American politics. Arguably Mr. Reagan, by denouncing the incontinent pursuit of pleasure, was striking at the American Way of Life. Certainly his pose as Cotton Mather is singularly unconvincing. He is our President Monroe — the man for the era of good feelings.

But he also should be a man of some public thinking. He should soon pick a serious forum for a serious speech about the future - not another speech celebrating optimism or God or Grand Ole Opry or the last four years. So far his campaign has set a tone, which is fine, but a tone is not a song and he can be, more than anyone in modern memory, the nation's singer — the presenter of a vision. However, he must do it now.

When he becomes a four-year lame duck he will have only the momentum built in the next six weeks. If his mandate is merely not to be Walter Mondale, his term will be sterile. Twenty-two Republican senators face re-election in 1986. His party will be fractious and distracted. If he just coasts to victory, as he perhaps can, he will lack the weight to hold his party's attention. So an October campaign of more rhetorical risk would be an act of grace — an unforced policy of statesmanship.

And Now Abandon War

Jan Tinbergen's column "Today's Arms Game Needs Modern Rules (Sept. 8) recalls Albert Einstein's words in 1946: "The unleashed power of the atom has changed everything save our modes of thinking, and we thus drift toward unparalleled catastrophes." Unorthodox thinking is a challenge, not an impossibility. Past civilizations have abandoned human sacrifice, the belief that the Earth was flat, slavery. Now war must be abandoned. Advances in technology have made war obsolete as a tool to resolve conflict. I believe the human mind is capable of finding peaceful means to settle differences.

The Issue Is Genocide Regarding the editorial "Ratify the ratification of the UN Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.

The senator bases his objections on the need to uphold "the sovereign independence of the U.S. Constitution" against the potential claims of international law. But, as Justice James Wilson remarked in 1793, "to the Constitution of the United States the term sovereignty is totally un-known." The "sovereign independence" of our Constitution cannot be threatened by treaties that the United States undertakes; to the contrary, it is the Constitution itself that ensures that foreign treaties are considered valid as the law of the land. In light of this special status of treaties in the American system of government, Hannah Arendt, in "On Violence," remarked, "The United States of America is among the few countries where a proper separation of freedom and sovereignty is at least Once again Senator Jesse Helms of Helms thinks ratifying treaties ing muddle in his attempt to block Constitution, he must think the act of legislating does so as well, in which case he should look for another job. The issue at hand is genocide, not "sovereign independence," and the sooner a window is opened on the darkness of Senator Helms's muddle, and the U.S. Senate gets clear about it responsibilities with regard to hisman rights, the better.

some from Britain, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands. It could not provide a better illustration of the dynamism of the French trade versus the inefficiency of an auction system run on civil service lines. One is struck by the elegance of the display in the best French tradition, formal and brilliant. It would seem almost impossible to fit harmoniously within a single exhibition furniture with dazzling marquetry, medieval stone and wood carvings, Buddhist statues from the Far East, Huguenot silver from Britain and Western paintings from the Flemish Renaissance to Kees Van Dongen.

The two architectural designers,

PARIS — A show covering art his partner, Monsieur Balhadere," have done it —and the dealers who selected their own works of art.

Part of the success of the exhibit lies in the balance. The visitor is spared the surfeit of "nice" commodes of vore.

The effort is noticeable among the eight top furniture dealers who have formed a syndicate called Antiquaires à Paris.

Jean Marie Rossi of Aveline gallery shows a "regulateur," or clock, which is a masterpiece of neoclassical furniture signed Roentgen in Neuwied, at a time when the great cabinetmaker - later called to Paris by Marie Antoinette - was still working in his native Germany. The piece, shaped like an architectural pedestal with pilasters on all four angles, matches identical pieces in the Pavlovsk residence in Leningrad and in the Schlossmuseum in West Berlin. They were apparently made as a set in 1780, a surprising early date for the advanced neoclassical style. At 2 million francs ($210,000), the regula-try commode with extraordinary ormolu fittings in the French Regence manner displayed by Bernard Steinitz, another member of wood, palissander, which takes on different shades, would be enough to betray the German origin. Moreover, Steinitz notes, it is identical to a pair of commodes from the collection of the princes of Bavaria to be seen in the Residenzmuseum in Munich. The mystery and splendor of all three pieces lies in the ormolu fittings with their masterly human masks. The casting and chiseling are in the greatest southern German tradition, but the style is French — the Louis XIV manner left an indelible impact on German bronze makers in Bavaria. Again the price, 1.3 million francs, is low. Its German design is barely familiar to international collectors, and Germans take no interest in discovery that makes the fair such out rare pieces. The view of the an attraction this year. But rare works of art here and there spice

The most remarkable contribution is that of a young dealer, Alain Letessier. On his spacious stand he displays pieces of a caliber that senior dealers would negotiate behind closed doors, Letessier, whose wife is Thai, spends half the year in the Far East and has access to pieces that few Western dealers are able to get.

A large Nandi bull in the round from the Khmer territories, which became part of Thailand as the Thais overran their present domains in the 13th century, ranks among the masterpieces of animal sculpture from Asia. A standing Vishou ligure of the 11th century Baphuon style is almost as surprising in a public display.

The rarest of all is a cross-legged figure of Ganesha, the elephant-headed creature of the Hinduistic cult adopted by the parts of Cambodia that had not gone over to Buddhism. There "Cliffs near Etretat," in pencil and wash by Eugène Delacroix with streaks of reddish brown and beige on the cliff, a pummeled white and gray sky matching in reverse the off-white sea, is stunning. At 315,000 francs, it strikes one as cheap once again, compared with the prices that were being paid at Christie's last season say for Thomas Rowlandson sketches.

My choice would be a view of an alley in a park with tall leafy trees by Nicolas Boguet (1755-1839). Sunlight falls in the background over beige sand, leaving a small feminine figure walking with a little boy in the shade. Some of the detail anticipates Corot's Roman period. At 100,000 francs it is the perfect acquisition for a university museum with limited funds.

The term naif does, in fact, distort the reality of Rousseau's odd apparitions in the second half of the last century. But what are you to make of a fellow who solemnly told Picasso: "We are the two great painters of this age, you in the Egyptian manner and I in the modem. The man was, in many respects, an innocent.

But there is a factor one tends to ignore that makes Rousseau's oddisemewhat more intelligible. His father ran a modest hardware store in the city of Laval, and young Henri, who had drawn a hicky lot and been exempted from military service, began working for an attorney at the age of 19. He piliered about 20 francs worth of stamps and loose change, however, and hastily enlisted in the infantry It was during this stint that he

This life he felt to be mediocre, and that is clearly why he tried to brighten it up with a few harmless fibs, but he also wanted to improve himself socially in the early days of the Third Republic, where social mobility became conceivable to people of modest origins, and Rousseau's path to respectability lay in painting.

Painting, however, in this period, implied "realism" and "perspective" and a lot of somewhat fossilized craft that Rousseau had not had the opportunity of acquiring. The painters he admired, at the outset at least, were the academic artists now referred to as pompler - such as Adolphe Bouguereau and Jean Leon Gérôme. But he did not have their talent for idealized realism. Instead "emotion plays the role usually assumed by craft," said Pissarro, who admired him.

But these bizarre points, which account for the sense of "naiveté." contribute to the overall effect and aura of his art. In a sense Rousseau is much more deeply in the right than his more sophisticated contemporaries because, although he is obviously tributary to the reigning cultural notions of his age, he does not indulge in the cultural game that the better adjusted artists can 50 well play. Instead he devotes himself to the dreams and visions that it is art's business to matera-

What seems odd in his work also derives from the fact that he emerged from a cultural world that was socially very modest and that he attempted, with earnest awk-wardness, to behave in the way that someone of his class could imagine

But he had tremendous pride he was also inclined to purple fits of stubborn fury — and was no doubt aware at times that his situation was a bit incongruous.

Here, as elsewhere, there was a constant ambiguous play between reality and make-believe. In 1908, two years before his death, Picasso and his friends (including Rous-seau's defender Apollinaire, Marie Laurencin and Georges Braque) organized a "banquet" in his honor at the Bateau-Lavoir. # A Sculptor's Struggle in the Public Arena

By William Wilson

Los Angeles Times Service C'OUTH BRUNSWICK, New Dersey - In August, ground was broken in San Francisco for a public sculptural memorial to the Jewish Holocaust, to be installed near the California Palace of the Legion of Honor Museum. The monument, scheduled to be unveiled in November, depicts a pile of corpses sprawled behind a barbed-wire fence. A single mournful figure stands staring from behind the barrier.

The work is by George Segal, a leading American sculptor who came to prominence in the 1960s making plaster figures, cast from life and assembled in tableaux of everything from go-go girls to lone-ly coffee drinkers in diners.

A critically acclaimed traveling retrospective in 1979 cleared any doubts as to Segal's place in the pantheon of contemporary masters of gallery and museum art. After that accolade, the artist could have rested securely in the somewhat rarified realm of curators, critics, collectors and artists. Instead, he ventured into the dicey domain of public sculpture. There, unprotected by institutional imprimatur, art is subject to political pressure and the values of mainstream society, not to mention physical abuse. Segal took to making bronze versions of his vulnerable plasters.

NYSE Share Prices End Lower

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches

NEW YORK — Share prices closed sharply lower on the New York Stock Exchange in a late selloff as investors expressed disappointment that major U.S. banks did not follow Morgan Guaranty's lead to a lower prime lending rate.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which moved lower at the outset of trading but was up more than a 12 points after the prime-rate cut, finished 14.80 lower at 1,201.74.

However, there are signs that Nordic governments are coming to grips with the problem of balancing their budgets, notably in Denmark and Sweden where the problem has been the most pressing Denmark has shown GDP growth well above the OECD average over the last two years. In its combined economic report, the industry federations of the five Nordic countries forecast Danish GDP growth of 3.5 percent this year, compared with a 2.5-percent rise in volume in 1983.

"The relatively strong growth in the Danish economy is partly a result of the moderate international recovery and partly the conse-quence of a reorientation of domestic economic policy," the federations wrote.

Exports have continued to grow rapidly, with the trade account of the first half of 1984 estimated by the Finance Ministry to show a surplus of more than 4 billion Finnish marks, compared with 400 million in the year-ago period. This factor, the industry federations' report estimates, should result in a current-account deficit of less than $800 million equivalent.

Private consumption and domestic demand are being kept under control, while the volume of manufacturing production is expected to continue growing. Output in Finland's important forest industry is up, and timber sales, which are fac-tored in dollars, are being lent a

Of the five Nordic economies, Iceland's underwent the most wrenching of changes last year. A new government took office in May 1983 and immediately set about reducing the country's explosive inflation rate, calculated at one stage last year to have jumped 130 per-cent on an annual basis.

Drastic policy measures were introduced, including a devaluation of the krona and a ban on wage ndexation, which helped to bring the inflation rate down to more manageable levels of about 15 per-

The current account is expected to remain in deficit, at about 2 percent of GDP. There are indications, however, that the economy will begin to grow again in 1985.

In the case of Norway, the international economic recovery has led to a revival in the traditional export areas of industry, such as metals, engineering and chemicals —

In Sweden's case, the export-led recovery of its powerful industrial base has not been without its problems. The Social Democratic gov-ernment of Prime Minister Olof Palme has had to cope with declining popularity when many of its 1982 election promises remained unfulfilled because of the reality of coping with severe problems in the economic and industrial structure. Prolonged economic recession, sharp declines in industrial investments and real incomes, as well as an accelerating national debt and public-sector expenditure, have all been difficult to come to terms with, particularly in an affluent society such as Sweden.

The result was a tough series of government measures imposing a mandatory savings introduced on April 12. The price freeze was lifted on June 28 this year, but at the same time the Swedish Central Bank raised the discount rate from 8.5 to 9.5 percent in an effort to curb credit expansion.

We cannot remain the sole anntry in Western Europe to exude foreign banks; that would mply appear too restrictive," said ten Wallgren, director-general of ae Swedish Bank Inspection

A government committee ap-pointed by the Social Democratic administration early in 1983 has been working at a rapid pace on the question and is due to report its findings later this month. Swedish bankers said that a decision has been made in principle to allow a number of foreign banks in, and a positive recommendation can be expected perhaps as early as the beginning of next year.

Nordic neighbors who feel that the move will facilitate cross-border banking relations, but also from the commercial banking sector, which believes the time is ripe for

In that respect, we have to accept that foreign banks come in with their branches or at least with subsidiaries." The current status of foreign banks in Sweden is limited to repre-sentative offices, and no fewer than 26 have opened offices since 1974. They range from Credit Lyonnais among the seven French banks to Chase Manhattan among the four U.S. offices, as well as four British and one Japanese. Up to 12 foreign banks, some of these already represented in Stock-holm, are expected to apply for permission to set up subsidiaries when the law is changed. As there are no more than 15 domestic commercial banks currently operating in Sweden, the authorities will be keen to limit the initial influx.

The same limitations will apply to foreign banks wishing to set up business in Oslo. "As many as nine banks are in for applications and we expect them to start obtaining licenses as from January, said Birger Langeland, assistant general manager at Den Norske Credit-bank, Norway's largest commercial

Mr. Langeland concedes that the going will get tougher and that the new banks, in seeking local personnel to staff their offices, could create staffing problems, particularly in foreign-exchange business, where skilled manning is much in demand and hard to find.

Two countries in the Nordic area with experience of a foreign banking presence at home are Denmark and Finland. Copenhagen was the changes its banking regulations to first Nordic capital to open its permit Norwegian — as well as doors to banks from abroad, soon other foreign — banks to operate Pressure on the Swedish government has built up, not only from its after Denmark joined the European Community in 1974. Finland so far has permitted three banks to establish subsidiaries in Helsinki since banking regulations were re-laxed in 1979.

Another example of cooperation is a joint venture by two local Swedish banks, Uplandsbanken and Wermlandsbanken, to seek application to be admitted to Norway as a joint subsidiary.

The Norwegian authorities, ho ever, have made it clear that Swedish banks will only be allowed to enter the Oslo market once Sweden other foreign - banks to operate on Swedish soil.

syndicated-loan market has suffered from a dearth of good-quality risks, what with the need by several major borrowers in Latin America and Eastern Europe to reschedule their debt. As a result, international banks have felt the need to beef up their books with good-country risks, such as those engendered in the Nordic nations, with their sound political structure and improving economic prospects.

This is not to say that the region This is not to say that the region has been without problems. The report goes on to say that in Sweden and Denmark, interest payments abroad are taking an increasing share of export revenues and it poses the question whether a growing external debt ratio to GDP forces these countries to keep their domestic interest rates above corresponding international rates.

However, recent efforts by the Danish and Swedish governments to narrow their current account deficits have done much to allay fears over abilities to manage indebtedness, although this is not to say that foreign borrowing by Stockholm and Copenhagen has declined drastically.

On the contrary, debt officials in the two capitals currently are en-gaged on a complex and massive task to prepay much of their more expensive debt with cheaper loans to avoid a bunching up of heavier repayments later in the decade. In the case of Sweden, it prepaid

EW YORK — As the dollar continues to climb to record heights against foreign currencies, the U.S. trade deficit continues to worsen.

The Commerce Department reported this week that, in the second quarter of this year, the U.S. balance of payments on current account rose to a record deficit of $24.4 billion. The current account figures include trade not only in merchandise but also in services, tourism and earnings on foreign investment.

With the dollar still rising, the current account balance now seems sure to climb well above $100 billion for the year as a whole, all of which needs to be financed by borrowing from

Many economists fear this 'new era' will end disastrously, perhaps by next May.

Many economists say the answer is no, and fear that this "new era" will end disastrous-

ly. "We are living in a fool's world now," says Professor Lester Lave of Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh. He calls the rapidly rising U.S. borrowing from abroad a "Ponzi game," one in which the borrower must acquire more and more money to pay off his growing obligations - until the mountain of debt finally

Mr. Lave says that as soon as foreign investors realize the dollar cannot stay up forever, they will begin pulling out. And he is afraid that, once this starts, the fall of the dollar will deal a powerful blow to the U.S. economy.

HEN is that likely to happen? "Not before the elec-tion," he says. "The administration has a tremendons stake in holding things together until then." He says that if necessary it will even increase interest rates.

He expects the fall of the dollar to come within six months after the November election, as investor confidence weakens and turns around. But he stresses the uncertainty of the forecast. "If it were really predictable," he says, "it would happen now." How sharp a fall is in prospect? That depends partly on how much the dollar is overvalued; at this point, many economists estimate its overvaluation at 25 percent to 30 percent. Mr. Lave contends that when the dollar starts to fall, it will overshoot, as happens in markets when fear replaces hope. He believes this will cause a "swift contraction" in the economy.

A sharp decline in the dollar's value is likely to reverse the flow of foreign funds to the United States. In the past year that inflow has provided savings equal to about 2 percent of the gross national product, providing a strong assistance in holding down interest rates and the rate of inflation. But John D. Paulus, chief economist of Morgan Stanley, the investment bank, warns: "The helping hand can form on us?

Mr. Paulus contends that, as foreign economies use their resources more intensively, inflation abroad will accelerate.

"Perhaps more important," he says, "a stronger foreign eco-nomic performance would raise rates of return on foreign capital and lead to higher interest rates abroad - a development that would encourage a flight from dollar-denominated investments and a consequent weakening in the foreign exchange value of the

TEPHEN Marris of the Institute for International Economics calculates in a forthcoming study that if the United States grows 3 percent from 1985 onward while the rest of the world grows 3.5 percent a year, and if the dollar is to remain at its present level, then the U.S. current account deficit - and the He estimates that the foreign inflow could reach $200 billion by 1989, or about 4 percent of the gross national product.

For that to be sustained, he estimates, foreigners would have to be willing to increase their net claims on the United States by $700 billion to $850 billion over the next four years. It appears unlikely that such a flow of capital from Europe to the United States could last that long, since it would drain West European countries, and others, of their capital funds.

Inflation Picks Up In U.S.

Food, Clothing Cited in Rise

By Jane Seaberry
Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — U.S. consumer prices rose a surprising 0.5 percent in August, the largest in-crease since April, as the cost of basic household items rose dramatically, the government reported

Prices rose nearly across the board as food and housing costs both rose 0.6 percent and clothing costs increased 0.9 percent last month. Increases in household goods had remained rather small for most of the year and many economists said they could not explain last month's jump.

Those same economists, however, said they expected prices to continue increasing only moderately for the rest of this year through about the middle of next year when

Inflation for the first eight months of the year is running at a 4.2-percent rate, slightly lower than the 4.5 to 5.0-percent many economists had predicted for this year.

The White House, which has used the reduction in inflation during the Reagan administration as a centerpiece of its economic presidential campaign theme, said Fri-day the acceleration last month was nothing to worry about.

The Consumer Price Index "held to an increase" of 0.5 percent, "maintaining the pattern of low inflation established over the past two years," said the White House spokesman, Larry Speakes, "De-clining pressure on interest rates and low inflation make the outlook for continued economic growth very promising.

Pressure on interest rates is indeed declining as first long-term and then short-term rates have edged down. Some economists predict that some banks may soon lower the prime interest rate from 13 percent because of slower increases in business loan demand and indications from the Federal Reserve that it would like rates to

Although the success of the company's arrangement with U.S. utilities depends on a number of imponderables, all parties are enthusiastic.

"The power from Hydro-Quebec is not cheap," said Phillip Otness, executive director of the New England Power Pool, an association representing nearly all utilities in the six-state region, "but we've reached a very good deal for both sides." The deal is attractive to the U.S. utilities, which already have enough capacity to meet their own demands. have enough capacity to meet their own demands, because most of their plants run on expensive oil

The new hydroelectric facilities here will give Hydro-Québec a total capacity of 29,200 mega-watts, well above its record peak demand of slightly below 20,000.

In other industries, or even other kinds of electric plants, the answer is to cut production. Here, means water over the dam, at no reduction in cost. At the coal- and oil-fired plants in the United States, by contrast, there are substantial savings in fuel costs if a plant is shut down when its output is not needed.

Record Oil Output Expected in China

Resters

BEIJING — China will product more than 110 million metric tons of crude oil this year, a record output, a Chinese official told Chinese and foreign oil experts.

Li Tianxiang, deputy minister of the oil industry, was quoted by the Xinhua news agency as saying that China had compensated for the decline in output from its huge Daqing field in the northeast by quickly bringing other fields into production. Other sources quoted by Xinhua said that production is increasing quickly at the Shengli field on the Shandong Peninsula.

China's crude output last year totaled 106 million tons and this year's target was 108 million tons.

Mr. Li said China plans to increase production to 150 million tons a

Jaguar Boosts BL's Profits

LONDON - BL PLC, Britain's state-owned automaker, reported on Friday a sharp rise in operating profit, mainly due to a strong performance by its Jaguar division before it was sold to private ownership.

Operating profits jumped to £17.9 million ($22.4 million) in the first six months this year, compared with £1.3 million in 1983. Without the profits from increasing export sales of luxury Jaguar cars, BL would have shown an operating loss of £23.3 million.

BL ended the half-year with a pre-tax loss of £17.7 million, an improvement on the £39.7-million loss in the same period of 1983. The automaker cautioned that demand for cars in Britain could fall later this year.

Wickes, Others For $32 Million

SANTA MONICA, California - Wickes Cos. Inc. has said that it and other defendants have agreed to pay $32 million to settle a class action suit pending in U.S. District

The company said Thursday that the plaintiffs include all persons who acquired publicly-traded Wickes securities from Aug. 12, 1980, through April 23, 1982.

Wickes said the settlement is dependent on final approval of the settlement by the federal district court, which will permit confirmation of Wickes's plan of reorganiza tion from Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceedings without significant de-

The settlement is subject to court approval for the plaintiffs, however. Such approval is expected Jan. 21, 1985, and the money is expected to be distributed Feb. 1. The company also said it has entered into a $140-million revolving credit agreement with its banks. The suits sought more than $100 million in damages and alleged that Wickes executives misled investors about the company's financial problems. Wickes, a major U.S. retailer, filed for bankrupcy in 1982

Mr. Amell said Ericsson's PC would be priced in the same range as IBM's, or between 30,000 and 50,000 kronor, depending on the configuration. ### Hydro-Québec Strategy Tied to Excess Capacity

(Continued from Page 13) Québec power will reflect a wide in the 1990s, and of a slightly small—variety of factors, however, experts or proportion of New York state's said. Since the average lossil fuel

When utilities in New York and New England share power, the price is generally figured either on an even division of cost, or an even division of savings.

For example, many utilities building nuclear plants have sold shares to neighboring companies, which agree to pay a precise frac-tion of the capital cost and operating cost in exchange for the same fraction of the output. Or one company agrees to run its relatively inexpensive coal plant to serve the needs of a second company's customers, so that the latter can shut down its expensive oil plants.

In such transactions, the saving from using coal instead of oil is then split exactly.

Neither formula appealed to Hydro-Québec, which figured that its cost of additional production is zero, and which did not want to permanently sell production capacity that it would probably someday need for itself.

Instead, the parties devised a price formula that is supposed to represent the "avoided cost" of oil and coal not burned. Most of the power will be sold at a price equal to 80 percent of the average fossil

The saving to the U.S. customers is more than 20 percent, however. A 20-percent saving would result if the U.S. utilities used the Canadian power to replace a mixture of coal and oil plants. But only oil-fired plants, the more expensive to operate, will be shut down.

cost being used is weighted to take into account the number of kilowatt-hours made by burning oil and the number with coal, the figure - and Onebec's income - will fall with the progress of coal conversion projects in the United

Utilities in New York and New England report spending 5 to 6 cents per kilowatt-hour on fuel if oil is used, depending on the sulfur content of the fuel and the efficiency of the plant. If coal is used, the fuel cost is less than half that.

Possibly the largest factor is OPEC's power over the cost of oil. The organization's recent weakness has been cited by Hydro-Québec's domestic critics, but Jacques Guevremont, the company's vice president for external markets, minimized the problem.

"What if the price of oil dropped by half?" Mr. Guevremout asked rhetorically at a news conference during a recent tour of the new facilities. That would be troublesome," he said.

"If the price of oil were to double," he added, "the Americans dealing with us would do better than we would." The reason, he said, is that the U.S. customers tric plants, however, the company would save 20 percent of a larger number of dollars otherwise spent on oil.

He was adamant, however, in saying that Hydro-Quebec was not in the business of energy speculation. But the company does hope to continue as a major energy export-

Behind the Noise, U.S. Airlines Quietly Raise Prices

Fare Wars Lower Rates on Some Runs, but Major Carriers Compensate to Keep Overall Yields up

By Agis Salpukas New York Times Service NEW YORK - Although the

maior U.S. airlines are making a big noise in slashing prices on some heavily traveled routes, they are quietly raising prices on a number of other runs.

In seeking to match the discount fares offered by People Express and other cut-rate carriers, moreover, most of the major airlines have imposed fare restrictions such as a seven-day advance purchase and a Saturday night stay. They also generally limit the number of seats to be sold at a discount.

"Even though there have been fare wars in selected markets around the country," said Mike Derchin, airline analyst for the First Boston Corp., "the fact is that the basic fare structure has remained intact since April."

As a result, Mr. Derchin noted. airlines' overall yields are up. The overall yield is calculated by dividing total revenue by "revenue pas-senger miles" — which are based on one paying passenger flown one mile (1.6 kilometers).

The industry's overall yield in March 1983 was 10.42 cents a mile. It rose to 12.27 cents by July that ar. Since last January, the yield has remained above 13 cents a mile. Although actual price-cutting has been limited, some analysts believe that the appearance of a fare war has stimulated air traffic, particularly among pleasure travelers. Air traffic, which was marginally higher in July than it was a year earlier, rose 7 percent in August and is climbing about 9 percent this month, according to Julius Maldu-tis, airline analyst for Salomon

Technically, the return to the investor on the equity CDs is tied to an "index" of loans put aside by the thrift unit for that purpose. At Murray, for example, the CDs carry a guaranteed minimum interest rate of 10 percent, paid quarter-ly. Murray contends that this portion is insured by the FSLIC. Investors are promised an 85 percent participation in any interest income Murray earns on a designated group of "commercial, income-producing mortgage loans'

New York, N.Y. 10016. Reviewed by Michiko Kakutani WITH her first novel, "Dale Loves Sophie to Death," Robb Forman Dew made a preco-cious debut. Her story of a young woman who returns home to the Middle West delineated, with precision and grace, the intricacies of family love between parents and children, husbands and wives -and it established Dew as a writer with a special gift for charting the subtle tidal flow of emotions that make up daily life.

Her latest novel, "The Time of Her Life," opens up no new fictional territory, but it reconfirms Dew's deft ability to peel away the surface banalities of ordinary life and dissect the secret core of emotions that lies within. In doing so, it ratifies her emergence as a gifted writer of fiction.

Dew writes of a region of America - the Middle West - where tradition and a sense of place have given way to the flux of modernity. Her characters live in split-level houses, identical except for the outside facades - each done up in a different style, such as Southern Colonial, to replicate a sense of history; and they all suffer from a sense that "there was always something afoot, afloat, in motion."

sionally gives her characters announcements to make — "We're the new Americans. Transient!" says one character — but such lapses are rare and necessary, given her skill at evoking the impermanence that haunts her people's emotional lives.

Residents of Lunsbury, a little university town in Missouri, Avery and his wife, Claudia, belong to a snobbish circle of people with "some limited re-nown," who are not particularly fond of one another, but who "congregate because they had that much in common, and they were all there was."

At 34, Avery Parks is an aging Peter Pan, whose boyish charm makes him irresistible to women, liked by other men. His enthusiasm transforms the simplest chores — making a toasted cheese sandwich, assembling a new stereo set — into an event; and he constructs "the celebrations of his life like houses of cards, with deliberation and the utmost care so they balanced all alone but were the result of his creation." Beneath his cheerful banter and bright laughter, however, lies a deeper melancholy, born of frustration and an astonishment that life holds, for him, no further surprises. When he is drunk, he turns nasty and abusive; and the morning after, he reeks of haggard regret.

Avery was the boy next door, whom Claudia had whom she always knew she would marry. Claudia lives vaguely, somehow convinced that "they were going through something and would one day get to something else," and her best attempts at conviction end up trailing messy wisps of "maybe's." Even Avery's announcement that this time he is moving out for good fails to stir her into action. She begins sleeping a lot, venturing out of the house rarely or not at all - content to live alone within the glassy walls of her own fluctuating moods.

Dew can convey, with a skill matched by few writers today, the quick, peculiar shifts in feelings that we experience, moment to moment, day by day how, in an instant, love can sour into irritation; anxiety dissolve into affection, attraction subside into nostalgia. And in "The Time of Her Life," she uses this ability to map out the ambiguities of the Parks' marriage, and to show the devastating conse-quences that this unstable alliance has on their danghter, Jane.

Though she is still a girl of 11, who wears pajamas decorated with happy panda bears, though she still inhabits that innocent space between childhood and adolescence, Jane is treated by her parents as a miniature adult. Claudia confides to Jane her fears that Avery is a closet homosexual. Avery uses Jane as a go-between in his affair with her violin teacher.

Because of the way her parents treat her, Jane herself is sophisticated beyond her years — though, really articulate ber emotions in quite the way that Dew portrays them. Would a child this age really think to herself, "she had become old without accumulaing a personal history" or, "she had lost forever the ability to fling herself blindly into imaginative hopefulness"?

Still, Jane never becomes a stereotype of the Still, Jane never becomes a stereotype of the preternaturally clever kid, fast with the witty quip and quick with the sarcastic put-down. There is a vulnerability and sweetness to Jane, and as readers we watch with growing trepidation as she gradually becomes infected with the violence of her parents' emotions. In fact, by meticulously evoking the threads of love that connect Jane with her mother and her father, Dew makes their unraveling, in the climartic scenes of this five novel seem all the more climactic scenes of this fine novel, seem all the more inevitable — and disturbing.

Houston Oilers (0-3) at Atlanta Falcons (1-2) - A rear ago, the Houston Otlers were 0-3, on their way to a 2-14 season. So that it would not happen again, Ladd Herzeg, the general manager, hired a new coach, signed a new quarterback and traded for extra draft choices. Here it is, the fourth weekend of the season at hand, and the Oilers are 0-3.

"Certainly, it has been a little frustrating," said Coach Hugh Campbell, whose team plays the Falcons we're neaded in the right direction."

Because of the bumpy start, Campbell has begun to wonder how the team might react if the losses piled up.

"I've thought about how they would compare the two seasons," he said. "At this point, I'm convinced they know it's different. We haven't been playing sloppy. We're playing with great intensity. Our players have just made come arms which the content of the content o have just made some errors, which they can see on the films. If we badn't made them, we would have had a great chance to win each of those games."

Most of the changes in the team for this season were made in the offense, and it is that unit that has provided most of the hope for a turnabout. Four of the five linemen are new to their positions, including Dean Steinkuhler, the first-round draft choice who is the left tackle, and Bruce Matthews, the first-rounder of last year who was moved from right guard to center. Also, Steve Bryant has replaced Mike Renfro, who was traded to Dallas, at one wide receiver position.

No member of the offense has had a more potentially difficult transition than Moon, who played six seasons in Canada, where the fields are longer and wider, and each team plays with 12 men. Yet, Moon has thrown for 778 yards and three touchdowns,

If only the defense had improved at the same rate. The Oilers have given up more yards than all but two teams. It has had trouble stopping the run and putting pressure on the quarterback in passing situations.

who are thriving without much of a running game. Dan Marino has completed more than two-thirds of his passes and leads the league with 10 touchdown passes. (Miami by 11)

San Diego Chargers (2-1) at Los Angeles Raiders (3-0) — The Chargers' offense seems to be charning at its former high rate of efficiency, as Dan Fouts threw for more than 300 yards for a third-consecutive game in a 31-14 victory over Houston. If he can keep it up, the Chargers have a good chance of breaking a four-game losing streak against the Raiders. The Raiders played haphazardly in defeating Kansas City; they committed 12 penalties and Jim Plunkett threw four intercentions. A decent game by the Charger defense could mean trouble for the Raiders. (Los Angeles by 5½)

Kansas City Chiefs (2-1) at Denver Broncos (2-1) -Despite their record, the Broncos are still suspect offensively, and the Chiefs' defensive front of Art Still, Bill Maas and Mike Bell is one of the best. They annoyed Jim Plunkett so much last Sunday that he threw four interceptions. Similar pressure against the Broncos' offensive line could make it an uncomfortable afternoon for John Elway. (Even) Pittsburgh Steelers (2-1) at Cleveland Browns (0-3)

- The Steelers' offense is improving, and the defense continues to be tough against the run. Not that the Browns can run; they have not cracked 100 yards on the ground yet. If they are forced to pass, that should be just fine with Pittsburgh. The Browns' offensive line has not afforded Paul McDonald enough protection, and he has already thrown six interceptions. The Browns' have played well defensively, especially against the pass. If they can bother the Steelers' David Woodley early, they might get their first victory. (Pittsburgh by 2½)

New York Jets (2-1) at Buffalo Bills (0-3) — The Jets' recent victory over Cincinnati was impressive in most every aspect. However, the Bills have been a difficult opponent for the Jets, winning six of the last eight games. For them to win this time, the Bills have to play with the same sort of intensity they displayed the 21-17 loss to the Dolphins Monday night. Against a slightly weaker team, the Bills probably would have won. (New York by 2)

A victory would help them return to the right frame of mind, especially with the Rams and 49ers on tap the following two weeks. But it will not be easy for the Giants. The Buccaneers, who have beaten them the last two times they played, are a lot like the Giants in that they have a sound defense and are capable of offensive surprises now and again. (New York by 6)

Minnesota Vikings (1-2) at Detroit Lions (1-2) — The Vikings won their first for new Coach Les Steckel last Sunday, 27-20 over Atlanta. St. Louis Cardinals (2-1) at New Orleans Saints (1-2) — It took a 46-yard field goal for the Cardinals to beat the Colts, but that says more about the spunky Colts, who were able to take advantage of several Cardinal mistakes. If the Saints play as they did in losing to the 49ers, 30-20, the Cardinals can get away with spotty play again. The Saints threw five interceptions and gave up 13 points in the fourth quarter, scoring none of their own. The Saints are still not getting consistent play from their quarterback, Richard Todd. But you never know about these things. The 49ers are a team far superior in talent, but one that has not yet put anybody away, despite its record. And they may have to play without Joe Montana, who has a rib injury. (San Francisco by 5)

Along upset the calculations of the Lloyd's of London odds figurers, earning the $1-million bonus offered by the three tracks. Those victories plus one in Paris in the Prix de l'Arc de Triomphe earned her the North American Horse of the Year title.

Now, All Along is back in the United States. She arrived in New York last Sunday and worked out Thursday in preparation for Saturday's $400,000 Turf Classic at Bel-

Henry, is a severe assignment.
All Along's owner, the Parisian art connoisseur Daniel Wilden-stein, and her trainer, Patrick-Louis Biancone, did not decide to enter her until last weekend, after she showed them in a workout that she was ready to run again. She twice was scheduled to return to the races in Europe but did not make it, and there were rumors that her racing career was over, the rig-ors of last fall's schedule having taken too much out of her.

One American horseman who does not think All Along is in an impossible situation is Mickey Taylor, a partner in Slew o' Gold, the winner in last Saturday's Woodward Stakes at Belmont

You have to understand how differently they train horses in Europe," Taylor said. "They don't pamper them. Because their races are long, the trainers work them long distances — a mile and a half and two miles aren't unusual.

"And although All Along offi-cially hasn't had a race since last year, she's probably had the equivalent of three or four in training. The trainers race their horses against their stablemates in the mornings, and then they're liable to take on the trainer's horses in the yard down the road. They only call them workouts, but they're just as good as the prep races we give our horses for major stakes over here." All Along might not try for a

Infidelity: How Wives Fight Back

By Georgia Dullea
New York Times Service

N EW YORK — There are only two central figures in the eternal triangle, as Shirley Eskapa sees it: the wife and the other woman. The man, she says, is simply the prize in an extramarital affair.

By writing "Woman Versus Woman" (Franklin Watts, $13.95), the 49-year-old British author speculates that she is risking the criticism of marriage counselors and feminists. She is probably right. In today's society, she acknowledges, "women are not supposed to fight to keep a man." "Nor are they supposed to fight each other over a man," she

Yet, after hearing the stories of 200 wives and 150 other women, Eskapa came away convinced that the war still rages, with or without social approval. Divorce, after all, is no longer a stigma. Extramarital affairs no longer shock. And the other woman, if not condoned, is at least not universally condemned. In the eyes of many wives in the book, the other woman appears to be yet another threat of modern living, like being

One of the themes to emerge from the author's talks with women in London, Geneva and New York is that even stable marriages are not immune to sexual infidelity. "The professionals all take the view that, of course, something was wrong with the mar-riage, "Eskapa said recently. "If the woman believed she had a happy, healthy marriage, why, then, something was wrong with her for believing it."

Faced with the classic warning signs of an affair — for the wife of a man who wore striped ties, the tipoff was a change in the direction of the stripes between breakfast and dinner - some wives became so immobilized by anger, jealousy or guilt that they unwit-tingly aided their rivals and eventually lost their husbands. A smaller number of wives welcomed the other woman and a few even recruited her. Those wives consciously used the other woman to spice up a dull marriage or to free themselves of an unwanted mar-riage. Once the husband had an incentive for divorce, the wife was able to negotiate a more

The awareness of having been used usually comes too late." Eskana said. "and many a second wife regrets not having seen through

The vast majority of the women, however, were hardly pleased to have a competitor for their husband's affections. Nor were they ready to concede defeat, Eskapa reports. Instead, using a variety of strategies, many of them managed to handle - some might say manipulate -- the situation and to win back the husband, at least for the moment. Some waged silent, secret, defensive wars. Others attacked directly. In all cases in the book, however, the target was not the husband, but the other woman and the affair itself. Since a man who contemplates leaving home for another woman is in "a crisis of ecstasy," as the author terms it, rational arguments about his responsibilities as a husband or father are unavailing. Emotional scenes only compound the problem because of, she says, "the man's dreadful state of conflict and confusion and anguish."

Having a wife and a lover battling over him flattered and excited some men, but most responded to a less direct approach. In this ploy, the wife presents a calm, tolerant, maternal front: She understands, she still loves him, she will be there waiting when he recovers from his unreason. She does not admit to being hurt and sometimes feigns ignorance.

Once the affair is out in the open, the element of secrecy is lost and hence some of the romance. The tactic is now "to diminish the other woman without diminishing the man," according to Eskapa. One wife packed up her four young children, along with family dog, an unruly Alsatian, and sent them by taxi to their father, who was living with the other woman. In a note, she gave elaborate instructions for the care and feeding of the children, adding that since the other woman had no job she could baby-sit. As for the wife, she left for an extended vacation. After three weeks, the other woman was snarling at the children, the dog and the husband. "She surrendered unconditionally," Eskapa said. "The wife was as gentle in victory as she had

Despite these and other success stories, professionals question the effectiveness of such tactics. They also worry about the impact on the women who use them. Selma Miller was among several marriage counselors who said women who deny their feelings about an affair may be damaging themselves.

"This reinforces patterns of submissiveness and the idea that women have to play little games with men," said Miller, past pres ident of the New York Association for Marriage and Family Therapy. "Women have been moving in the direction of being stronger and more assertive about what they

Miller said that, in general, wives seem to handle infidelity more honestly and more effectively than husbands. "I'm seeing more and more men in my practice who are having trouble dealing with the other man," she said. "Not that women have an easy time, but the feeling is, 'Well, he's having a fling.' Unless it's serious, the wife often looks the other way. But I have yet to see a man look the other way. They become suspicious, jealous. It damages them irreparably."

reportedly gave one of her most daring performances — playing a carefree girl picking flowers while smuggling a message to an English paratrooper in occupied Belgium. The episode is described in a new biography, "Audrey: The Life of Audrey Hepburn," to be published Oct. 12. According to the author, Charles Higham, Hepburn as a 13year-old worked against the Nazi occupiers for the underground in her native Belgium. She "skipped through the woods, hearing German voices not far off." When she found the soldier, she slipped the message to him, "then slipped the message through the rocks and skipped off, picking more flowers. As she was walking down a forest path, a German soldier loomed up ahead of her. She smiled sweetly at him and gave him her wildflowers. Delighted at this sign of friendliness, he touched his cap and patted her shoulder, and she strolled off." Hepburn, 55, whose movies include 'Love in the Afternoon" and "Breakfast at Tiffany's," did not authorize the book, Macmillan Publishing Co. said.

The father of the soul singer Marvin Gaye pleaded no contest to a reduced charge of voluntary manslaughter in the shooting death of his son during an argument last April. Michael Schiff, the attorney for 70-year-old Marvin Gay Sr., said the first-degree murder charge was reduced on a plea bargain. Schiff believes that Gay, who was a Washington minister, will not be sent to prison. He could face up to 13 years when sentenced Nov. 2.

Gay underwent surgery in May for a nonmalignant brain tumor.

Hutton, who achieved fame as a brassy blond in movie musicals of the 1940s, looked back at her drug problem Wednesday and said, "I tried to commit suicide. It was the end of the line." In Rhode Island, she met the Reverend Peter J. Magnire, who she believes saved her life by giving her faith while she was hos-pitalized for depression. Hutton said she hoped to graduate from A Riverside County, California, the college and stay on to teach
